The following is a quotation of 35 U.S.C. 103(a) which forms the basis for all obviousness rejections set forth in this Office action:

> (a) A patent may not be obtained though the invention is not identically disclosed or described as set forth in section 102 of this title, if the differences between the subject matter sought to be patented and the prior art are such that the subject matter as a whole would have been obvious at the time the invention was made to a person having ordinary skill in the art to which said subject matter pertains. Patentability shall not be negatived by the manner in which the invention was made.

Claims 1-4, 6 and 7 are rejected under 35 U.S.C. 103(a) as being unpatentable over Yukawa et al. (Pat, No. 6,428,393 B1 (of Record); hereinafter Yukawa et al. Inasmuch as Applicants submitted this prior art it is submitted that they know and fully understand the teaching thereof and if the Office misses or omits any particular feature of this teaching it is understood what the teaching shows. That being said, Yukawa et al. teach a method preparing a board or wafer having a plurality of conductive bumps or terminals exposed from a resin coating. (Cf. Abstract) The board is attached on a rotary wheel that has at least one (1) cutter blade or grinding wheel that has a cutter blade that is made with diamond or super hardened metal. (Cf. Col. 3). The table on which the board is situate as well as the blade are rotated so as to provide that the conductive bumps are uniform in height. The chuck table revolves at a much slower rate than the grinding wheel, preferably about 1/100 as fast (Cf. Col. 3). It would have been obvious cut or turn the heads of the terminals in order to make them uniform in height since that an object of the prior art is to make the bumps co-planar with the surrounding even surface (Cf. Abstract). Also since Yukawa et al is knowledgeable that the wafer with its uniform bumps can be useful to connect to electrodes of a package or a PcB (Cf Col. 1) it is also held to have been obvious for the terminal board to be used as an interposer. As applied to claims 4 and 7 it is held to have been obvious to use a single crystal diamond tool for the cutter inasmuch as one would obviously use this extremely hard material for cutting the terminals. Moreover again Yakawa e t al do teach cutter blades preferably being made from diamond.

Claims 5 and 8 are objected to as being dependent upon a rejected base claim, but would be allowable if rewritten in independent form including all of the limitations of the base claim and any intervening claims.
